

In a country where most blindly follow politics without checking backgrounds or facts, Sinclair Broadcasting's decision to force their stations to air an anti-Kerry documentary only days before the election is a clear example of a major network NOT understanding it's moral obligation and abusing it's power. Good corporate citizenship starts with understanding that certain things have a time and place, and discounting a political candidate prior to an election is not exactly conducive to moral business tactics. While Sinclair is at it, why not only show the Bush side of the debate? Upon pondering on this issue I have the perfect idea for Sinclair Broadcasting's next possible special. How about "Snorting Coke with Bush - A Special about the life and times..." Then again, that would seem awfully partial and one-sided now, wouldn't it?

Thank you.
